A Note from the Director...

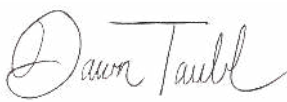

Welcome to Old Oak Ridge! This story began with a desire to explore the things closest to my heart: family, my Southern roots, and our responsibility to the environment. Set against the backdrop of a fictional South Carolina town celebrating its 350th anniversary, this musical centers around a majestic 500-year-old angel oak tree. Inspired by the famous Angel Oak in Charleston, this ancient tree serves as a symbol of our history, our beauty, and our connection to one another.

At its core, Old Oak Ridge asks some of life's most meaningful questions: How do we pass down what is important from our family and carry on a legacy? How do we avoid staying too tied to the past when there is an important call on our present and future? How do we balance honoring our roots while still allowing new branches to grow?

To explore these themes, we chose to wrap them in the vibrant energy of small-town gossip, iconic townsfolk, plenty of Southern sass, and a foot-stomping score. The 1950s is a favorite musical era of mine, and using that golden age of rock and roll felt like the perfect way to draw audiences into this world. When I brought this concept to Carol Taubl, our Co-Founder and Music Writer/Director, she immediately jumped on board, drawing from her own deep Southern roots to help bring this soundscape to life.

Collaborating to make this show both hilariously funny and deeply moving has been an absolute privilege. We wanted to offer a production that captures the warmth of Southern hospitality while telling a story about a community bound by generations of love and ambition. It is a tribute to the "angels" in our lives and the deep roots that keep us grounded, even when outside forces try to shake the branches.

Thank you for sitting under the oak tree with us tonight, and we hope you enjoy the show!

theater, serving as musical director at Long Wharf Theatre and the Educational Center for the Arts. She later founded SOUND Affect, sharing hope through music locally and internationally in Haiti and the Dominican Republic. Now in its fourth season, her company SOUND & Stage serves as a creative home for original works like Old Oak Ridge. Her greatest joy outside the arts is her six grandchildren. Carol is deeply grateful to work alongside her daughter-in-law, Dawn Taubl, whose heart enriches every production. She extends heartfelt thanks to the Old Oak Ridge cast and the community whose support makes this work possible.

"Trees play a crucial role in mitigating natural disasters, especially on an island like Haiti. In a country prone to hurricanes, floods, and landslides, trees act as powerful protectors. With their strong root systems, they prevent soil erosion and landslides during heavy rainfall and storms. By absorbing excess water, trees reduce the risk of flooding and enhance natural drainage systems. Their dense canopies also serve as a natural buffer, minimizing damage from strong winds and safeguarding both infrastructure and lives. Trees in Haiti serve as nature's defense mechanism, offering resilience in the face of environmental challenges."
